President’s Message:

Blessings Overflowing

The lyrics of an old, old song tell us to “Count your blessings, name them one by one/Count your blessings, see what God hath done!” It’s good advice. Counting our blessings reminds us to be thankful for God’s work and providence in our lives, and it’s a great antidote to the spirit of dissatisfaction that can stifle our joy in the Lord.

In the Bible, blessings are not only counted, they are poured out — sometimes metaphorically, and sometimes literally. In the Psalms, God is praised because “He brought streams out of the rocky crag and made water flow down like rivers” (Psalm 78:16). This “pouring out” of water in the desert was a life-giving blessing. In the New Testament, Paul writes to Titus of a God who saves us not because of the righteous things we’ve done, but because of His mercy and by “the washing of regeneration and renewing by the Holy Spirit, whom He poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior” (Titus 3:5-6). Jesus was, in a sense, poured out for us as He died on the cross: “One of the soldiers pierced Jesus’ side with a spear, bringing a sudden flow of blood and water” (John 19:34). Many blessings were poured out in the Bible — water, wine, blood and Spirit — and all are precious.

Pouring out blessings is hardly a human idea. We are far more likely to store blessings, protect them, hold them close and keep them safe than we are to pour them out. But God’s ways are different. When the Israelites brought their sacrifices to the temple in Jerusalem, they brought the blessings of their agricultural lifestyle to be burned, baked, and, yes, poured out. The drink offering followed the burnt and grain offerings, poured out over hot coals to be vaporized and rise to the heavens with the prayers of God’s people.

The idea of pouring out blessings leads me to a few questions: Are we pouring out our blessings, and if so, to what end?

At Asbury, God had blessed us richly indeed. He has poured out His love, His peace, His Spirit, generation after generation. We are honored to be entrusted with the education and spiritual formation of our students. Our beautiful campus is not only a home for the students who live here and a workplace for our faculty and staff, but it also serves the community in ways that range from cultural enrichment to exercise facilities. We are blessed to spend years with young people who, I believe, represent the answered prayers and hope of many for a fresh moving of the Spirit in our world. And above all, we are blessed with His presence. Whether in Chapel or casual meetings on the sidewalk, He moves among us in both power and gentleness.

Asbury is equipped and fit to pour out the blessings He’s given us because you, our alumni and extended family, have done the same. In these pages, you’ll read stories of alumni and friends of Asbury who have poured out their financial resources, wisdom, time and expertise with a spirit of generosity that strengthens and encourages us. You’ll read stories of students who have been blessed by the outpouring of others and are in turn discovering their own opportunities to be poured out for the world’s needs. You’ll see that when God’s people pour out their blessings, the cause of Christ advances and the world — and Asbury University — are better for it.

Dr. Sandra C. Gray

Athletes on a Mission
Like so many other mission-minded Asbury University students, three Asbury athletic teams — composed of more than 70 athletes and coaches — ended their summer breaks early for a chance to spread the love of Christ around the world. The men’s soccer team served in Jamaica with Global Soccer Ministries, the women’s volleyball team served in Puerto Rico with Puente Missions, and the cross country team served in Costa Rica with One Mission Society.

Making the Grade
For the third-straight year, Asbury University has earned a Top-5 spot in the prestigious U.S. News & World Report “Best Colleges in the South” rankings, a system based on indicators of academic quality, student selectivity, class size and financial resources. A few of the indicators that lift Asbury to the head of the class include top graduation rates, the highest freshman retention rates of any school ranked in the Top 50, and an impressive student/faculty ratio of 13/1.

Asbury University recently hosted Kentucky First Lady Jane Beshear and the Department of Travel and Tourism for a unique project combining two of Asbury’s nationally-recognized programs: film production and equine studies.
The Beauty of Salvation
Dr. Bill ’78 and Diane Nelson ’83 Ury visited Asbury in September as the speakers for Fall Revival 2013. The week’s theme was “The Beauty of Salvation,” and the Urys helped students and community members explore what it means to live in Christ. They currently serve at Elizabeth City (N.C.) Evangelical Methodist Church, where he is the lead pastor and she is the leader of young adult and women’s ministries.

A Homecoming Surprise
Asbury University made history in October at Homecoming 2013 by electing two Queens, Jennifer Silver (left) and Lucy Allen. The best friends and roommates joined King Brady Parks in cheering on the men’s soccer team to victory over Georgetown College.

170 x 70
The dimensions, in feet, of Asbury University’s new outdoor equine arena.

This arena nearly doubles the amount of training space available to students in its nationally-recognized Equine programs. In addition to students taking classes in horsemanship ministry, stable management and equine facilitated wellness, Asbury also provides “classes” to horses in its Police Mount training program. With so many feet going in different directions, the extra space will be put to good use.

“To whoever switched my laundry from the washer to the dryer: I know it doesn’t seem like much, but that little act of kindness made my day. This is one of the many reasons why I love Asbury.”

C.S. Lewis’ Stepson Shares His Story

Fans of C.S. Lewis enjoyed an exciting and rare treat in late September as Douglas Gresham — Lewis’ closest living relative and consultant for all the Narnia films — made appearances at Asbury as well as the Cincinnati and Louisville areas. As a gift to the community, Asbury flew Gresham to the U.S. from Malta for three evening events in conjunction with the release of “C.S. Lewis: A Life Observed” by Lewis scholar and Asbury University Professor Devin Brown. In each location, Gresham and Brown took the audience “behind the scenes” of Lewis’s life, faith and relationships. Brown’s book is the latest in a growing body of work for both scholarly and popular audiences. Brown has published numerous essays and scholarly articles on C.S. Lewis and J.R.R. Tolkien, and in 2008 he served as Scholar-in-Residence for the Summer Seminar held at The Kilns, the Oxford home of C.S. Lewis.

Can You Tell Me How to Get...?
Asbury University students and Professor Doug Walker chased the clouds away with a trip to Sesame Street in New York City during their Media Industry Travel class. The class includes visits to professionals — including some alumni — working in film, television and other media-related positions.

The New Abolitionists
Two years ago, a group of Asbury students founded Threedom, a network of Christian students fighting modern-day slavery. In September, Threedom hosted Kentucky Senator Tom Buford and other state officials on campus, where they presented new state laws against human trafficking in Kentucky.

Home Sweet Home
The Alumni Relations Department has made a new home at 101 S. Lexington Avenue in Wilmore, Ky. Feel free to stop by and say, “Hello!” to Carolyn Ridley ’81, director of Alumni Relations, and Liz Stephan ’09, Alumni Relations assistant.

This Guy Means Business.

Meet Asbury’s newest educator, with the heart of a teacher and the savvy of a CEO.

On paper, Dr. Michael Kane looks like an ideal candidate to lead Asbury’s Department of Business, Economics and Political Science. A businessman with extensive experience in the academic world, he earned his doctoral degree at the University of South Carolina and spent decades working in international business for IBM, Lexmark and other companies. He also helped establish a non-profit that plays a role in saving lives around the world.

In person, however, it becomes apparent that Kane’s outward qualifications are reinforced by inward convictions about the role of faith in the marketplace, and the potential for Asbury students to be agents of change in the world. One of his formative experiences occurred relatively early in his business career.

“I was invited to have dinner with a guy in China who owned a printing company,” Kane said. “He’d been in prison two years because he noticed that the house church didn’t have materials — Bibles, Bible studies — so he started printing materials for the house church. He was warned to stop, and he didn’t. One day, the police showed up at his house and arrested him. No trial, just jail.

“This guy had a countenance that was almost like his faith had become so real that it changed his approach to business. He was at peace, he had joy — He had achieved something in business I had not achieved: persecution for using his business to further the gospel. It changed who he was.

“As a result of that experience, I saw the tremendous opportunity for a business person to use their work and see themselves on mission when they’re traveling on business.”

Kane’s experiences in the non-profit world have added to his perspective on business as mission. After joining the board of a company based in Israel that was originally founded by a missionary, he brainstormed a way to use the company’s technology — audio compression — for the public good.

“Sixty percent of the world consists of non-literate learners,” he said. “I asked if we could create a device that would play audio in a format that couldn’t be black-marketed or copied over, and would be solar powered and indestructible.”

It turns out that they could, and the devices have been used to communicate messages about democracy, human rights, women’s rights and health issues in Africa and the Middle East, among other places.

“We saw how business can have a huge impact on poverty, social justice, spreading the gospel, training people — the power of business became really clear in my mind.”

Kane began at Asbury on Oct. 1 and, in addition to teaching, will further develop business minor and other programs.
The story of a BMX cyclist, a family friend — and a farm.

by Rebekah Daniel
he two men sharing a table in a North Carolina steakhouse that summer evening seemed unlikely to be friends — and if truth be told, they were still getting to know each other despite having known of each other for decades through family connections. The older man was just past 80, his cane leaning against the edge of the table, white goatee neatly trimmed. The younger man was 24 and looked as if he’d experienced a few of life’s bumps and bruises recently. When he sat down to dinner, he was one shower removed from the highway from Orlando to Pittsburg. He was riding his bike and searching his soul.

“He called one day and said he was on his way to California,” said Dr. Jiles Kirkland ’50. “He asked if he could stay a night, and I said, ‘Of course.’ I took him out to a restaurant, and I’m glad I did, because the boy was starving. I told him, ‘Anything you want, son, anything you want.’”

The trouble was that, beyond a full stomach, Bryce Toole ’15 wasn’t completely sure what he wanted.

“I was trying to find where I was in life,” Toole said. “I stayed with him one night and kept going on the Blue Ridge Parkway. But what was awesome about that supper with Uncle Jiles was that he saw potential in me.”

“We prayed together, and he was a kid you could love right off the bat,” Kirkland said. “He didn’t have direction for his life, I could see that. But he was trying to find it.”

A few months later, the unlikely friends reconnected in Florida, and Toole’s mother told Kirkland he’d decided it was time to go to college. Toole had chosen an affordable community college close to home. Kirkland smiled, the wheels in his head turning. He had a different idea.
A seed is planted

Kirkland first heard about Asbury from the pastor of a small church outside of Plant City, Fla., where he grew up on his family’s farm. Kirkland had no doubt about what he was going to do with his life, and it wasn’t farming.

“I found Christ at age 10 and felt the call to preach, but it was at 16 that I finalized it and preached my first sermon,” Kirkland said. “I had filled out an application to go to Moody Bible Institute; my father wanted me to go to Bob Jones. But it was God’s plan all along, unbeknownst to me, that I go to Asbury, and I’ve never regretted it for a day.”

Ironically, it was farming that made it possible for Kirkland to pursue the path he had chosen. In the mid-1930s, Asbury had purchased several small farms near its campus in Wilmore, Ky., and consolidated more than 350 acres to raise cattle, hogs and corn. The farm was begun in an effort to offer employment opportunities to its students during the Depression; as the years went by, the food produced there supplemented the campus dining hall: “With the coming of the war, high prices and a scarcity of food, it proved to be an extra special blessing, providing a hungry student body with an abundance of meat and dairy products when other schools existed on a meatless diet” (Asbury Collegian, May 1947). In the fall of 1946, Asbury offered Kirkland a deal.

“They said, ‘If you’ll agree to work on the farm for 35 cents an hour, we’ll let you in,” he said. “A friend of mine was going with a girl who was my neighbor, and I had a girlfriend in the church with me, and the four of us came to Asbury together. The girls stayed in Glide-Crawford, and we went to the farm.”

And just like that, Kirkland became one of the Farm Boys, a brotherhood of seven to nine male students who shared two rooms in a farmhouse and supplied the campus with beef, pork, eggs, milk and vegetables. Most were training for the ministry; some had agricultural experience; a few arrived fresh from the European and Pacific theaters of World War II; all embraced the opportunity to work for an education. The next year, Kirkland’s world received a dose of sunshine with the arrival of Herbert Bowdoin, an old friend from Florida.

“Herb and I came from the same church and preached our first sermons a week apart,” Kirkland said. “We were friends from the third grade on. We were just like brothers, and when I chose to go to Asbury, he chose to go to Asbury.”

The friends soaked up all that Asbury could offer, from history lectures with Dr. Duvon Corbitt ’23 to the revival of 1950. Kirkland married Eloise Gates ’50, the girl who had come to Asbury with him, and Bowdoin ’51 married Polly Thompson ’51, a girl Kirkland knew in high school. After they graduated, they both chose to go back home to Florida and pastored churches not far from each other. The families remained close. In fact, Kirkland’s daughter babysat for the Bowdoin kids, one of whom grew up to have sons of her own: Blake, Brooks … and Bryce.
The wheels begin turning
Lots of kids get bikes for Christmas and ride them around the neighborhood, maybe jump a few block-and-board ramps in the driveway. Bryce Toole got a bike for Christmas one year and ran with it, so to speak. By the time he graduated from high school, he was on his way to fame in the BMX world; he worked at an extreme sports camp in Pennsylvania, he was in videos and magazines, and he had two corporate sponsors.

“I loved the freedom of expressing myself with BMX,” Toole said. “I could express myself in my style of doing tricks, and I loved the risk of living on the edge. It’s a crazy feeling to fly through the air.”

From 2004 through 2010, Toole embraced the good in the BMX world: interesting challenges, a close community and a sport he loved. He embraced the destructive edges, as well. But aside from the physical considerations — Toole has broken a kneecap and wrist, had stitches and been knocked out — there weren’t many healthy spiritual mentors in his life, and at age 24, he was beginning to look for more than the next odd job.

Toole’s mother, Kathy Bowdoin Toole ’11 Christensen, had kept in touch with Kirkland, her father’s best friend, and knew of his fondness for Asbury. In fact, Kathy was herself following the family tradition and finishing her college degree through Asbury’s Adult Professional Studies program. She was proud of Bryce’s decision to start college, and when Kirkland returned to Florida in the Fall of 2010 for her mother’s funeral, she mentioned the news to him.

“The Tuesday before Christmas in 2010, Uncle Jiles called my mom,” Bryce said. “He said, ‘Kathy, would Bryce consider coming to Asbury University if I helped him financially?’

“I was out with my brothers. My mom called me, and I got teary-eyed, sitting there with them. I knew it was a sacrifice.”

It remained to be seen, however, whether coming to Asbury was logistically possible. Toole had no SAT scores, no application. Christmas was in four days, and the offices were closed. Toole called on Jan. 3 and talked to the Admissions Department about what he needed to do. He sent in his materials. On Jan. 9, his admissions counselor called to congratulate him on his acceptance. The next day, he packed a duffle bag, boarded a plane and arrived at the front steps of Johnson Hall with about 16 hours to spare.

The first weeks of class turned out to be an intense transition time for Toole. Part of the transition was structural — it had been years since he was responsible for keeping a curfew or completing academic work. The deeper transition, however, was spiritual.

“I started letting God into my life, and I started surrendering my shame, my guilt, my fear,” he said. “A few nights I just wept, surrendering to God, accepting His forgiveness and forgiving myself.”

The preachers in Toole’s life — his grandfather and Kirkland, for example — would have recognized this brokenness as a necessary tilling of the soil in anticipation of a
For Toole, the Mission Farm was a place where several passions — some long-standing, and some discovered at Asbury — converged. He loved the physicality of working in the garden; he loved the way growing good food provided common ground for connecting with different people in the community. By the time the Mission Farm entered its second year, Toole was serving on the student steering committee, planning vegetable bed rotations and taking fresh vegetables to the local farmer’s market on Saturday mornings.

Each year, the farm has grown. In 2012, students built a shed from lumber harvested at the garden plot and installed a water cistern. This year, they’ve added chickens. After more than 60 years, Asbury students once again enjoy eggs collected from Asbury chickens in the dining hall breakfast line.

The idea of coming full circle resonates with Toole and Kirkland, whose financial support of Bryce and his younger brother, Brooks, has helped create space for this transformation in his life.

“I’d been thoroughly indoctrinated in farm life and knew I didn’t want to be a farmer,” said Kirkland. “But Bryce is just absorbed by it. He is so focused now. I wouldn’t try to direct him in one way or another except to find God’s will and pursue it with full diligence. Whatever he does, he will be successful at it. He’s got the Spirit, and he has the commitment.”

Now, Toole is looking for ways to put down literal and metaphorical roots after graduation, perhaps through an apprenticeship with a farmer in a neighboring county. After traveling many roads, he finally has an idea of where he wants the path to go.

“Ever since I got involved here, I’ve had this calling, and a feeling of complete peace,” he said. “When I’m at the Mission Farm, I feel that. I feel God is calling me to cultivate the soil, because He’s been cultivating the soil of my heart.”

In October, Asbury University became the first private institution in Kentucky to achieve a “Kentucky Proud” designation for its efforts to support local, sustainable agriculture. Agriculture Commissioner James Comer (left) visited campus to inaugurate the “Farm to Campus” initiative, a state-organized program that promotes incorporating local food products at educational institutions, and enjoyed a meal in the cafeteria featuring garden-fresh produce and locally raised chicken. At the announcement ceremony, Asbury President Sandra C. Gray noted that while the school’s “Kentucky Proud” designation is recent, the values it reflects are long-standing.

“We, of all people, understand as Christians that we’re called to be good stewards,” Gray said. “Locally produced food is fresher and healthier, and we’re happy to emphasize health and good stewardship of our environment and bodies.”
Achieving God-Sized Goals

Since I am the Vice President of Institutional Advancement, I find this issue of the Ambassador, with its lists and charts showing a financially healthy University, satisfying and comforting. But as a Christian, I find it absolutely thrilling.

Let me explain: throughout the Scriptures, we find God reminding His people, over and over, that He is Jehovah Jireh, the God Who Provides. In response to that providence, God’s people are to give as well, with generous and thankful hearts. We are to invest our treasure in the Kingdom, ‘for where your treasure is, there your heart will be also’ (Matt. 6:21).

Asbury’s extended family of alumni, parents, friends, faculty and staff have given abundantly to Asbury in ways that are visible and quantifiable, such as the financial donations commended in this report, but also in the equally valued and harder-to-count resources of prayer, time, leadership and counsel. More than numbers, this magazine is celebrating people whose hearts are with us and support the mission to equip a new generation to give glory to God — and that is a thrilling thought.

As we go about the task of reaching out to like-minded people to offer them opportunities to be a part of Asbury’s world-changing mission, I am keenly aware that we all stand on giants’ shoulders, achieving God-sized goals with the gifts of those who came before. Thank you for walking with us and giving generously — in all manner of things — to Asbury University.

MONTHLY GIVING

Joining our monthly giving program is a simple, no-hassle way to support Asbury University on a consistent basis – and it makes sense!

For More Information, call us at (800) 888-1818, x2104 or e-mail development@asbury.edu
Asbury University today holds theology classes in the Morrison building, houses resources to sharpen young minds in Kinlaw Library and equips students to probe the natural world in the Hamann-Ray Science Building. But before Morrison, Kinlaw, Hamann and Ray were buildings, they were men, and Dr. Bob Wiley ’61 remembers well their influence on him and the institution they helped build.

Wiley moved to Wilmore, Ky., as a child, when his father, a member of the Class of 1925, returned at President Z.T. Johnson’s request to teach in the Science Department.

"As I grew up in that community, I was being influenced by people at the college and seminary as well as when I was a student at the college," he said. "I found at Asbury the ongoing emphasis of walking with the Lord deeply, in a Spirit-filled life. That helped prepare me academically and spiritually for graduate school."

Wiley attended medical school at Vanderbilt and studied in the University of Cincinnati surgery department before and after military service in the 1960s. Not long after he had become well established in his practice as a thoracic and vascular surgeon, he moved into two roles that would provide him with an opportunity to ensure that Asbury students were impacted spiritually as he had been: financial supporter of the institution and member of the Board of Trustees.

Since then, Asbury has never been far from his thoughts or prayers. The cultural and technological landscape has changed since his student days, but the deepest needs of the students — to experience the transformation of the Holy Spirit and walk with the Lord — remain as compelling a reason to support the University as they have ever been.

"I have to reflect on the vision and purpose of Asbury’s founder, Dr. John Wesley Hughes," Wiley said. "He wanted Asbury to send men and women into the world.
not only having experienced for themselves salvation and sanctification of their hearts, but then to go forth and proclaim scriptural holiness to the world, whatever their profession or ministry might be.

“The greatest challenge today is not only to train our students academically to lead as men and women of accomplishment, but I feel that one of our greatest challenges is to preserve, maintain and articulate the message of heart and life holiness to our students.

“In the Chapel services, in the classroom, on the basketball court and soccer field — may our students see this message of purity and holiness in our professors and administrators, and may they not only see it but hear it, as well. I pray that the Holy Spirit would create a hunger and thirst for this depth of righteousness such that, before the students graduate, they can give testimony to the Lord’s deep work in their hearts and lives that prepares them for the challenges of graduate school, ministry and service to the Lord across the world.”

Early in 2013, Asbury University received a $500,000 grant from the James Graham Brown Foundation to further the School of Education’s highly regarded teacher preparation programs. As Asbury rounded the halfway point of the grant’s timeline this fall, it became increasingly clear that the sense of community being built through grant-funded programs was as valuable as the University’s expertise in education.

For example, Asbury has been able to use grant funds to enable seven leadership coaches from the Asbury faculty — all former school principals — to reach out to principals of schools in Eastern Kentucky associated with the Kentucky Valley Educational Cooperative. The coaches have provided one-on-one and small-group support to the principals and assisted with several one-day school visits to guide discussions on strengths and opportunities for improvement. Professor Channon Horn is coordinating an evaluation component to determine the impact of the programs on the principals’ practices.

As the relationships have deepened, both the school principals and the Asbury faculty have become better equipped to improve K-12 student achievement.

“The key non-negotiable is the relationship piece,” said Dr. Rocky Wallace, Coordinator of the principal program and an assistant professor in Asbury’s graduate education program. “When we focus on authentic, mutually helpful relationships with our colleagues from the Eastern Kentucky region, then they see that we are serious about walking alongside them in this grand adventure to help in school improvement. And, as a result, we certainly learn more about what our ‘school of Ed’ students need as we continually develop and refine our programs here at Asbury.”

In addition to the leadership mentoring, the grant has helped fund professional development programs for Kentucky educators. Through grant funds, Asbury Professor Amanda Goodwin is able to work...
University Outreach

personally with faculty in Breathitt County schools to improve their understanding and effective use of technology in the classroom. Also under construction is an electronic program to develop a virtual learning school avatar to help Asbury undergraduate and graduate students practice classroom management strategies.

The opportunity for learning from teachers in the field has kept the technology-oriented components of the grant activities centered squarely on relationships, as well.

“We’re trying to design the instruction and technology piece based on what school leaders need, rather than what we think they need,” said Dr. Sherry Powers ’77, dean of Asbury’s School of Education. “While we are trying to have a positive impact on student learning, effective instructional practice and education leadership in Eastern Kentucky, we also are very intentional in building strong relationships with the students, the faculty, the administrators. This is a one-year project, but we hope it’s the beginning of a longer partnership with schools and school leaders to meet the needs of students in the classroom and the community.”

Asbury has partnered with KVEC to write a grant to be implemented next year to further develop the programs that have been established; notice on whether the grant has been awarded is expected in the coming months.

Did You Know?

• More than 98% of Education majors at Asbury University find placements in public and private schools immediately following graduation.

• Asbury faculty have worked with school teachers and administrators in Knott, Lee, Breathitt, Magoffin, Wolfe, Leslie and Johnson Counties. The services they’ve provided — all performed in conjunction with their normal teaching loads at Asbury — include professional development sessions, small group training with principals, workshops and conferences.

• Technology such as iPads and specific Web applications have enabled teachers in different locations across the state to communicate with Asbury professors and each other, gathering real-time information about best practices in the classroom.

The Future of HUGHES 2014 Reunion Class Gift Project

To ensure the Chapel experience reflects the commitment to excellence that guides all Asbury programs, the University will launch a special Reunion Project in 2014 to help fund technology upgrades to Hughes Auditorium. By improving the sound and projection quality of the room, as well as updating aesthetic factors such as carpeting, paint and lighting, Asbury hopes to make live, real-time interaction with people around the world possible from a technology, sound, projection and broadcast perspective. Asbury is making multi-year pledge opportunities available to meet project estimates of about $250,000.

The Role of a Lifetime
One media com student pursues excellence as her witness

Hannah Wilcox ’15 always knew she wanted to act, and in high school, she became interested in directing, producing and writing for film and theatre, as well. But when she encountered an Asbury representative at a college fair and heard about the extensive alumni network in the film industry, the top-notch programs and opportunities to work at the Olympic Games, it sounded too good to be true.

“I had already accepted a full ride at another school when we decided to visit Asbury,” she said. “We took a tour a week before ‘decision day,’ and as soon as I stepped on campus, God said, ‘You’re going to have to trust me. You need to be here.”

“I have not regretted a single minute,” she continued. “Asbury has equipped me intellectually, spiritually, emotionally and mentally to be salt and light in each opportunity I’ve had here.”

In just a few short years, Wilcox has explored a broad selection of the opportunities available to her through Asbury’s programs and connections. For example, she is writing and producing an original sitcom as an independent study this semester; she created a short film that was selected for screening at the annual Highbridge Film Festival; she spent 10 weeks in Los Angeles last summer studying at the Art of Acting Studio and will travel to Moscow next fall for a semester at the Moscow Art Theatre; and she worked with broadcasters at the London Olympics and earned kudos for her even-keeled response to the high-pressure environment.

“Asbury’s classes prepare you to perform the tasks put before you, but the way you stand out in the industry is not only what you do, but how you do it,” she said. “When you come out of our program, you know who you are in Christ. That’s what makes you survive the auditions, pitching your ideas. Part of Christianity is pursuing excellence, and that makes you stand out.”

While in Los Angeles, Wilcox’s work ethic and integrity opened the door for conversations about faith and life with her fellow actors — conversations that offered a glimpse of what a life centered on Jesus can look like to people who are hungry for peace and security. But even though Wilcox might have seemed like a solitary missionary in that context, she was supported by a network of Asbury alumni in the area who had helped to connect her with a church and Bible study. It was a perfect example of how the alumni presence — connecting students with internship opportunities or a church family — can complement alumni giving to make scholarships and programs financially feasible.

“The media is so powerful,” Wilcox said. “Everybody goes to the movies, and people still go to theatre to watch shows. Our goal is to make people ask questions. Even when things are light and comedic, I want them to walk away asking questions that could lead them to Christ. I feel like that’s what God is calling me to.”

“If I could say anything to alumni, I’d say, ‘Thank you, thank you, thank you,” she said. “You don’t know how much of a difference you’ve made in my life.”
“As soon as I stepped on campus, God said, ‘You’re going to have to trust me. You need to be here.’”

FROM SMILES TO SHOES
An athlete's love for soccer becomes a tool for ministry.

Service is a core element of life at Asbury University — one that looks different for every student. For junior Adam Howard, service looks like soccer.

This year, Howard has been able to put the skills in sports and leadership he had honed at Asbury into practice in two locations thousands of miles apart. First, he had the opportunity to play and minister with the Seahorses, a semi-pro Christian team in California. Howard and his teammates worked in clinics and camps, spending time with kids, teaching them about the sport, and most of all, showing them the love of God.

"If I learned one thing, it was love," he said. "Whether that was God’s love for me, when I wasn’t playing as well and was getting down on myself for playing badly, or whether He was showing me how to love others. It’s amazing to see what a big smile kids can get on their face just from showing them that somebody cares about them. We don’t necessarily know where each of these kids come from, if they have a rough home or a good home — it just feels good knowing that they’re putting a smile on our faces, and we’re putting a smile on their faces."

In addition to playing with the Seahorses, Howard had the opportunity to go on a mission trip to Jamaica with the Asbury men’s soccer team, serving at two orphanages in Kingston. During a game of soccer one afternoon, Howard and his teammates realized that some of the children they were playing with were not wearing shoes.

"While we were playing on the blacktop, we noticed that they’d play there for a couple minutes, and then you’d see them dart off somewhere," Howard said. “You’d be looking for them, and you’d see them standing in the shade, because their feet were hot. They’d stand there for 15 or 20 seconds, then come out and play.”

One of Howard’s teammates offered to pause the game so a boy could go put on some shoes. “I don’t have any shoes,” the boy replied.

Because of this experience, the team decided to organize a shoe drive to benefit the orphanage — the goal is 100 pairs or more. Donations were accepted at every home game and in the office of coach Ben Andrews ’06 (in the Luce Center) between games.

Howard says God used last summer’s experiences to teach him active love.

““In 1 John 3:18, the Bible says, ‘Dear children, let us not love with words or tongue, but with actions and in truth,’” Howard said. “I feel like that spoke to me 100 percent this summer, especially with the kids, and just showing them love, and showing them how to play, and how God loves them.”

Resonating Gifts for Asbury Students

Asbury University is pleased to announce a gift that will approach $2 million from the estate of acclaimed pianist Eda Jameson. A portion of the gift will be set aside for Asbury’s performing arts program, with additional funds designated for student scholarships.

Jameson’s relationship with Asbury began in the mid-1980s, but her passion for piano performance was born much earlier in her life. Jameson’s first recital occurred at age 5, and by age 13, she performed the Piano Concerto in A Minor by Grieg with a full orchestra. She held a bachelor’s degree from UCLA and a master’s degree from USC, and she served on the faculty of Yuba College for 23 years.

Jameson traveled from California to Kentucky annually for 25 years to perform for students in a variety of venues on Asbury’s campus. She was first introduced to the institution at Redwood Christian Camp near San Francisco, where she met Asburian Y.D. Westerfield ’26 and was invited to visit the campus in 1984. Thus began a fond relationship that impacted Jameson as deeply as the Asbury students who heard her play: “Asbury has become a big part of my life, and I have felt really close to it and to the work that is being done here,” she said in 2007.

Her performances ranged from longer programs during special Chapel services to smaller, more intimate recitals in the parlor of Glide-

“I have felt really close to Asbury and to the work that is being done here.”
— Eda Jameson

Eda Jameson donated two Fazioli pianos to Asbury, one before she passed away last year and another by her estate. Only 100 of these world-renowned concert pianos are produced each year.

“Gifts such as Mrs. Jameson’s not only speak to her open-hearted character, but they are also a vote of confidence in the programs and students we serve at Asbury,” said Charlie Shepard ‘99, vice president of Advancement at Asbury. “We feel responsible to honor her high standards for musical performance with equally high standards for academic excellence and spiritual vitality, as well.”

Through her gift, the friendship that began under California redwoods now resonates in Kentucky’s rolling green hills. If you would like to make a gift of annuities or explore ways in which your legacy at Asbury can last far beyond your lifetime, call (800) 858-3511, x2350.

Student Spotlight

A journey from Asbury towards global ministry.

When Sonnelle Woolls ’14 ponders the people and events that put her on a path to graduate in May as a business and accounting major, the dots connect in a way that can only be divine.

First there were the alumni who ministered with her parents in East Asia and introduced a certain small school in Kentucky. There was the possibility of studying with her brother Brownrygg, who was also accepted as a student. And there was the Asbury scholarship that came through just in time. Once on campus, there were faculty who helped Woolls combine fields she loves (studying people and how they think) with her natural talents (logistics, numbers and executing a plan). And there was the cafeteria.

“I worked in the Caf as a supervisor and loved working with the people — motivating them, getting to know them,” Woolls said. “Management was the culmination of my logistical aptitude and love for people.”

Woolls’ vision for her business and management education, however, is not a traditional CPA or corporate business future. Internships, honest conversations and good old-fashioned soul-searching have given this daughter of missionaries the confidence to hold the financially attractive careers at an arm’s length and navigate based on a calling.

“After a lot of prayer, I realized what I really want to do is start a business,” she said. “My dream is to start a coffee shop in the non-Western world where I can help women come out of rough communities and give them life skills.”

Asbury’s two-pronged emphasis on academic excellence and spiritual vitality has given Woolls an educational background in which ethics matter as much as return on investment and relationships complement profitability. It’s an education that will travel well and provide a solid foundation for further learning in both graduate school and the business world.

“I’m a very logical, practical, down-to-business sort of person,” said Woolls. “It hit home when Dr. Gray spoke in Chapel from Ezekiel about how God had taken a heart of stone and turned it into a heart of flesh. I feel like that’s what’s happened to me here. I’ve been learning to live in His grace, and now that I’ve accepted my issues and struggles, I understand God better for it.

I love to walk the cross country fields around sunset, and I sense God’s presence in those times and thank Him for people who are praying for me. I wouldn’t be able to be here without the people who support the University. I’m thankful for the impact they’re making on people and the roads they’re paving for us that we don’t always see. It’s a legacy I hope to continue.”

Kathleen High ’51 graduated from Asbury prepared to teach, coordinate children’s ministry and manage an elementary school. Her skills didn’t spring out of thin air, however; she credits the faculty at Asbury for modeling the attributes she found essential in her own teaching.

“When I left Asbury, I was well prepared,” she said. “I remember the first year I taught school, I started teaching the sixth grade in rural Maryland. My supervisor was visiting in my room one day and said to me, ‘Kathleen, where in the world do you get your ideas?’ She was so impressed with the fact that I was creative in the things I did with the students. Many of the children had so many needs — and I had 46 students in my class. But I had tremendous teachers at Asbury who were dedicated Christians, very concerned about all of us and worked with us. That’s why I was well prepared.”

Of course, High’s years at Asbury were not all work and no play. She was active in several music groups, including the Women’s Ensemble and Chorus, and she played the piano and accordion in area churches on the weekends. She also worked on the college newspaper staff and traveled to Frankfort often with the Salvation Army. The Revival of 1950 electrified the campus — “I had never experienced left outside the door on a rainy evening in a music studio in the basement, hold a treasured place in her memory, as well. A self-confessed night owl, she spent many a night studying in her house mother’s two-room suite in Morrison and once spent two hours hiding in a friend’s closet to avoid being caught out of bed after the 11 p.m. “lights out.”

With memories like these, becoming a financial supporter of the institution was an easy decision.

“I’ve always felt that it’s a tremendous school, and I’d like to see other young people have the experience of studying at Asbury,” she said. “There’s no other school like it. When I came out of Asbury, I was truly prepared, and above and beyond that, I’d had opportunities to have the Christian experience of being discipled and inspired. It’s something that’s not found in a lot of other places.

“It’s not easy for young people today — college has gotten so expensive. I feel like I should do whatever I can to help.”

Beavers Give Back

More than 60 years after graduating from Asbury, the Beaver Class of 1953 continues to impact students and advance the cause of Christ in honor of one of its much-loved members. In 2010, class president Doyle “Jack” Pavy passed away after more than 45 years of vocational ministry. As a student, Jack was an enthusiastic athlete, competing on the Beaver teams for basketball and softball. This past summer, the Beavers successfully funded the Doyle “Jack” Pavy Memorial Athletic Endowed Scholarship, enabling the class to remain involved in the thriving athletic ministry at Asbury. While the initial funding goals have been achieved, additional gifts could increase the amount of scholarship aid awarded each year.

To contribute to the fund, contact Institutional Advancement at (859) 858-3511, x2104.
At the time I learned about Asbury’s new Principal Licensure Program through information that was distributed at the Kentucky Department of Education, I was considering pursuing new opportunities in education. After meeting with Dr. Rocky Wallace for a rather extensive discussion, I realized Asbury offered the type of programming I was seeking to further my education. I knew I had to have something that would fit into my already busy schedule, and the online model seemed perfect. I also loved the idea of being a part of a cohort of learners. When I left the interview, I just felt like Asbury was where I needed to be — beyond the structure of the program, it was the overall philosophy of servant leadership that attracted me to pursue my studies at Asbury.

Initially my goal was to earn additional certifications so that I could pursue new opportunities in education at the school or district level. After 19 years in the field of education, I felt like it was time for a change.

In October 2012, I was diagnosed with breast cancer. This came as quite a shock, particularly since there was no history of cancer in my family. While not something I would have voluntarily chosen, the cancer journey is one that has forever changed my life. From the beginning (after the initial shock), I had a strange sense of peace about the ugly, nasty journey on which we were about to embark. I knew that God was in control and we had to lean on that faith and knowledge. We have been and continue to be richly blessed by so many wonderful people, relationships, and opportunities — many of which never would have been possible had we not traveled this path.

The cohort model being implemented through this program has brought a group of diverse learners together not only as professionals, but as friends. We have supported one another through some very challenging life issues faced by different members of the cohort over the course of the past two years. I was not sure what to expect for the year after my cancer diagnosis, and Dr. Wallace was one of my first contacts as I began to rearrange my life. I was not sure I would be able to continue in the program with all the uncertainty ahead, but he lovingly reassured me that I could do this. The professors, members of this cohort, and others provided encouragement through kind words and prayer throughout my journey. I think these real-life experiences have not only brought us closer together as cohort, but also serve to prepare us for providing support to those we lead and mentor in the future.

It has been interesting to see the impact the learning in this program has had on my current work. I have always been a very detail-oriented, focused worker — one who could take a task or challenge and bring it to fruition. Now, I tend to think more globally in how the work we do impacts schools and students. I have found myself more in the role of leading the direction of the work rather than simply doing the work. It’s opened up many rewarding and exciting opportunities to provide trainings and assist schools in providing increased opportunities to ensure improved preparation of students for the transition to postsecondary education, the workforce or military.

The study of the servant leadership model has also impacted my life in other ways. I find that I am more committed to being involved in organizations that serve the needs of people. In church and community activities there are always opportunities to make a difference in the lives of others. Through servant leadership, we are able to grow support and involvement of others in order that the good work of these organizations is sustained.

I’m not exactly sure what direction I will pursue after I finish in December, but I do know it has equipped me with the foundation for success in numerous paths. I am confident that my Asbury experience will have a positive impact in the direction of my career whether I pursue education leadership opportunities at the school, district or state level. It’s been a great opportunity for both my personal and professional growth.

“I had a strange sense of peace about the ugly, nasty journey on which we were about to embark. I knew that God was in control.”
GIVING THROUGH YOUR IRA

“Asbury has meant a lot to me, and it was a very simple process to instruct the IRA to make a donation to Asbury,” said Rev. Floyd Fought ’46, who donated through his IRA in 2012. “It’s a way by which I can pay back what Asbury has done for me.”

If you are over 70 ½, you can transfer any amount up to $100,000 from your IRA to Asbury University in 2013 without claiming any increased income or paying any federal income tax. Better yet, the tax-free rollover gift will qualify for your required IRA distribution, thereby lowering your taxable income. And this transfer may be made over and above the other charitable gifts you have already made in 2013.

FOR MORE INFORMATION on how to take advantage of this special offer, please contact Stu Smith at (800) 888-1818, x2350 or email stu.smith@asbury.edu.

Asbury University’s Communications program is designed to help students communicate truthfully and effectively in an age of diversity. For Jorge Castorena ’16, this mission dovetails perfectly with the hands-on lessons he’s learning from life itself.

When he was 6 years old, Castorena moved to the United States from Mexico with his parents and two older sisters. Abruptly plunged into an English-speaking world, the family spent a transition year in Texas before moving to Louisville, where Castorena’s father worked as an engineer. Once in Louisville, the family began the process of finding their place in an environment where their immigration experience — safe, legal and with a clear path to citizenship — stood out.

“I grew up in predominantly white neighborhoods,” Castorena said. “We go to Mexico nearly every summer, and I have a Mexican identity, but I didn’t grow up in a Hispanic community here. It’s been interesting to find our place in an American, Caucasian community and church while maintaining a Hispanic identity, as well. There’s always been an interesting tension. With the Hispanic students at my public high school, their experiences were similar, and they related to each other in ways I could not relate.”

Castorena heard about Asbury from his pastor, an alumnus of both the University and Asbury Theological Seminary, and was intrigued by the “academic excellence and spiritual vitality” approach he learned about from an Asbury booth at a college fair. He held back on making a choice, however, throughout the spring of his senior year, weighing the relative advantages of several different schools as the May 1 deadline for a decision approached.

“I was at church in April, and I was sick of the decision hanging over me,” he said. “I asked God to show me where to go. The pastor started preaching on holiness, told the young people to surround themselves with other Christians and told parents to send their kids to Christian colleges.

“I was like, ‘Fine, God. I’ll go.’ I haven’t looked back since.”

Since Castorena arrived, he has jumped into classes and activities with the goal of making the most of his Asbury experience; so far, he has served as a TAG (Transition and Guidance) leader for freshman orientation, class cabinet, the Asbury Chorale, the Collegian staff, the Latino Student Association and sophomore musical. The activities complement the Emerging-Leader Scholar Program in which Asbury invests in ethnic students through scholarships, seminars and leadership events. And though Castorena has a few years of school ahead of him still, he has already started to discern the legacy he’ll carry on from Asbury.

“The No. 1 thing I’ll take away is spiritual maturity,” he said. “Asbury has facilitated growth for me through mentors, the community itself on the hall and Koinonia Bible studies. It’s ignited a deeper and more diligent search for the business of God. I feel like a different person spiritually than I did when I came in as a freshman.”
In September 2013, a relationship that began more than 20 years ago grew into a gift that will continue to bless Asbury University students for years to come.

Zaxby’s® CFO Blake Bailey and his wife, Shannon Czapinski ’92 Bailey, visited campus to present a check from Zaxby’s for $50,000 to the School of Communication Arts. In honor of the gift, a multimedia classroom lab in Asbury’s Miller Center for Communication Arts, a $12.6-million dollar facility, will be named The Zaxby’s Multimedia Lab.

The Baileys’ appreciation for Asbury University extends back to Shannon’s student days, when the guidance and support she received from Dr. Jim Owens, Dean of the School of Communication Arts, inspired in her a vision for excellence in media. That vision for excellence is shared by Zaxby’s, whose generous gift will help to equip students with high-quality resources.

"Lazy philanthropy is as good as the prodigal son throwing his dad’s money around, but if philanthropy is done right, we can change the world and make it a better place," Blake said. “I am very judicious and strategic in where I send resources. With Asbury, I feel like I can rest assured because there is a history of wisdom and excellent stewardship.

"As Christians, we are called to excellence in our daily work. If we are working to glorify God, then, we need to strive to be the best at what we do. The world needs to see excellence. I think Asbury gets this, and it is inspiring to me."

Batter Up!
Alumni joined the Asbury University baseball team in trying out a new, laser-graded field at Homecoming 2013. The baseball and softball fields underwent extensive renovations over the summer during Phases I and II of a $1.6-million Kirkland Complex improvement project. The Kirkland Complex is named in honor of Dr. Jiles E. Kirkland ’50. Naming opportunities for such areas as the dugouts, scoreboard, press box and stadium seating, are still available. To support the project, contact the Office of Development at (859) 858-3511, x2104, or development@asbury.edu.

Beginning in Fall 2013, Asbury University’s Adventure Leadership program became the Center for Adventure Leadership, a one-stop-shop that unites academics with field application, Asbury’s Challenge Course and the Archways freshman orientation program.

Trent Ellsworth, Director of the Center for Adventure Leadership, sees the educational fruit of combining classroom training and hands-on application on a daily basis. He believes that the program hinges on what he calls “transferrable experience.”

“A transferrable experience is an experience that takes place in an adventure setting but has influence upon our lives that we then apply in a non-adventure setting,” he said. “If I teach you leadership in an outdoor setting and you become an excellent problem solver, communicator, and leader in that setting, you are fundamentally going to be an excellent problem solver, communicator and leader in a business setting, a ministry setting, an academic setting — wherever you may find yourself.”
An emphasis of the Recreation major, as well as its own minor, Adventure Leadership combines serious academics with practical wilderness skills to create valuable experiences that apply to everyday life. One of the key features of the program is a “block semester” in which students take 15 credits combining theoretical and field-based learning.

Asbury junior Varee Vettes learned problem-solving techniques at climbing sites during the block semester last spring, and this semester she is experiencing the transference of those skills for herself.

“I’ve really learned to not just view a piece of literature one way, but to look at different ways, and not just view things with one answer, but with multiple different answers,” she said. “After having to be a leader in the field so many times, and having to be confident and know your stuff, it’s definitely transferred back into my classes. It’s teaching you skills that you’re going to use outside of college — leadership skills, and people skills, and teaching you different perspectives to have on things, and always to think about things straight on.”

LEADING THROUGH ADVENTURE

Adventure Leadership is an experiential program combining theory and practice. Theoretical courses in experiential education, outdoor education, stewardship and leadership are combined with technical courses in rock climbing, canoeing, caving, wilderness travel and wilderness medicine.
CHALLENGE COURSE

Having served more than 45,000 participants since 1992, Asbury’s Challenge Course includes both low-course and high-course elements. Low-course activities are designed to increase participants’ awareness of their communication and problem-solving; high-course activities offer opportunities for participants to experience the impact of teamwork. The Challenge Course is open to the public and has been used extensively for corporate team-building and leadership development.
Archways is a pre-orientation wilderness excursion into the Daniel Boone National Forest open to anyone new to Asbury University. The trip is designed to prepare new students mentally, spiritually and emotionally for entrance into the Asbury community.
Q: Why did you choose Asbury?

A: I chose Asbury University because I was looking for a Christian school that kept Christ in the center of everything they did. I had gone on a few college visits before I came to Asbury’s. When I came on my visit, I knew before I left I was going to come here.
— Parker Touchton, Ashland, Ky.

Q: What has impacted you the most in your first month?

A: Chapel has probably made the biggest impact on me. Three times a week, I hear the word of God preached and have the opportunity to worship my Savior. The times you grow the most tend to be the times you least expect it, and that’s what happens in Chapel.
— Sheridan Swathwood, Anderson, S.C.
Q: Who influenced your decision to come?

A: Dr. Jon Roller ’83, the director of the Worship Arts program, was the one who convinced me to come to Asbury. When I began to look at colleges, I knew that I wanted to become a worship leader, so all of the schools that I visited were of a Christian denomination. It was unsettling that the schools I visited before Asbury that claimed Christianity as their basis for all things were solely focused on my abilities as a musician, rather than on my spiritual state. Upon meeting Jon for the first time, he asked one simple thing of me: “Tell me about your relationship with Jesus.” It was a breath of fresh air to know that I would be learning under a professor who cared more about whether my heart was tuned to God than whether my voice could tune with a band.
— Sarah Grace Bloyd, Louisville, Ky.

Q: What class have you enjoyed the most?

A: I have enjoyed my Old Testament class the most because of all the new information I am learning. Although I grew up with an idea of the biblical stories that I learned in Sunday school, I am learning each story more in depth. It’s fascinating to realize how something that was written a long time ago can still teach lessons and tell stories that are interesting today.
— Aaron Winneroski, Greenwood, Ind.

Q: What have you learned about yourself so far?

A: That I’m more independent than I thought I was. I wasn’t sure how I’d handle being seven hours from home, but I’ve done a lot better than I expected.
— Anna Adams, Clanton, Ala.

A: Well, I can be pretty shy, so one thing I’ve discovered is that stepping out of my comfort zone and starting conversations can lead to some awesome friendships.
— Allison Hensley, Wheaton, Ill.

Q: What are you looking forward to the most in your time at Asbury?

A: I am really looking forward to building more great relationships and growing as a person during my time here. I am also looking forward to pursuing my goal in becoming a sports reporter, and Asbury is the perfect place to accomplish that goal.
— Emaleigh Haines, Bedford, Ind.

A: I am looking forward to getting a high quality education to help me with my spiritual journey with Christ and meeting new people that I can keep in touch with for the rest of my earthly life.
— Mason Lambert, Owensboro, Ky.

In this 2013–14 academic year, Asbury University is presenting alumni, parents and friends of the University with a bold opportunity to directly impact current students in an unprecedented way. Since August, every dollar donated to the Fund for Asbury University has been designated for student scholarships.

The “1,325: A Gift for Every Student” initiative provides donors the opportunity to make a gift directly to student scholarships (which will continue to be distributed to the young men and women who apply and are selected for awarded or need-based tuition assistance).

The goal is for at least 1,325 alumni, parents and friends of Asbury (matching the number of undergraduate students enrolled at Asbury in 2012–13) to make a gift above their previous year’s gift.

The opportunity to change the lives of our students through this initiative is so real and vital, members of our Board of Trustees will match the increased amount of every gift made by Dec. 31, 2013, up to $250,000!

To make a lasting difference in a student’s life, call Damon Mazza at (859) 858-3511, x2133, or visit asbury.edu/giving.

BIRTH OF A NEW DAY — Angel (left) walks with her newborn colt Echo (right) as they are turned out in the pasture for the first time since his birth. As he grows, little Echo will be able to explore the 340-plus acres of pasture at Asbury’s Equine Center, as well as the trails, barns and riding arenas in which students and horses learn new skills. He’ll have good company, too. — Asbury houses more than 30 horses at the Equine Center for activities such as trail riding, Police Mount training, ministry programs and classes for majors in Equine Facilitated Wellness and Equine Management (also a minor).
